Charles Stewart Parnell was born at Avondale in 1846, at the height of the Great Famine. He became leader of the Irish Party in the Westminster Parliament and first President of the Land League. He laid the foundation for the eventual ownership of the land by the farming community and made great progress towards obtaining political independence for Ireland. Fanny and Anna Parnell were born at Avondale (in 1848 and 1852 respectively): they also became ardent nationalists and through the Ladies' Land League and other organisations made a significant but too often overlooked contribution to Irish history.
